Douglas E. Wagner

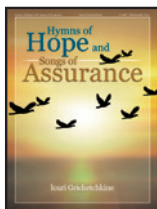

Celtic Suite for Organ

The term "Celtic music" can take on various meanings and styles, but in general is characterized to musical celebrations that draw upon the basic emotions of life (love, happiness, grief, and sorrow) and the awesome beauties of nature, often with an overarching self-realization of a greater power at work around us. Folk music from Ireland, Scotland, and Wales is rich with these qualities in tuneful ballads and jaunty dance tunes (reels and jigs) that explore tonal centers and invigorating rhythmic movement. Douglas Wagner has written an organ suite in three movements that is a true delight to play and hear. The three movements could serve as service voluntaries (prelude, offertory/communion, postlude), or the entire work can form a recital selection. (3-staff, Int.)

Inspirations

Organ Music in the Spirit of the French Tradition

Steeped in this tradition from his earliest training (with Marcel Dupré's first American student), Penfield has long embodied a practical, contemporary manifestation of the beautiful French romantic period of organ literature. The pieces in this volume are of course suitable for recital, though individual movements are also useful as service voluntaries. Of particular note is "Petite symphonie," a five movement organ symphony well within the capabilities of many players who might not have felt themselves able to play a work in this style.

George Shearing

Sacred Sounds from George Shearing For Organ

Based On Early American Hymn Tunes

George Shearing was one of the most well-known jazz pianists of his era. As a composer, he is known for his hundreds of popular tunes, including the jazz standard "Lullaby of Birdland." In the late 1970s, Shearing produced his only foray into classical church music, this volume of organ pieces (also available in a piano edition, KK228). Shearing's appealing jazz-inflected idiom makes for distinctive and memorable treatments of classic American hymn tunes. Shearing collaborated closely with Dale Wood in creating the details of these idiomatic organ arrangements. (3-staff, Int.)
